

50,000 IN LINE OF THE SOCIALISTS' MAY DAY PARADE

Red Banners Carried From East Side to Union
Square Plaza.

Armstrong, formless, shifting body of men, women, boys and girls, each carrying either a red flag, a red banner or a bit of red ribbon, marched from the heart of the east side to Union Square to-day and held a great mass-meeting. There were probably 50,000 persons in the line of march, and many thousands more assembled at Union Square to take part in the exercises there.

PARADE SILENCED BUSINESS ON EAST SIDE.

The parade utterly disorganized the great East Side, where business was practically suspended during the afternoon. Hundreds of policemen were simply swept off their feet by surging crowds in the street and open places. Inspector Cahane and fifty men who were detailed to keep a semblance of order at Rutgers Square, where the parade was scheduled to assemble for the start, were completely exhausted by their arduous labors.

No attempt was made to bring about an orderly formation of the parade. The Socialist marchers fought their way through the crowded streets to Union Square and started away whenever they got a chance. In reality there were two parades, which joined forces en route to Union Square, but the crowd that started from Rutgers Square was the larger.

Walking two abreast or three or four or ten abreast, as their fancy dictated, the marchers twisted their way through the east side like a great red-mottled snake. Through Canal, Ludlow, Broome, Pitt, Livingston, Suffolk, Houston and First streets, Second Avenue, Third street, Great Jones street, Washington Square, Waverley place and Fourth Avenue, the assemblage plodded steadily, already with eyes straight ahead. There was no cheering, no laughter, no singing—just a halting progress through the streets.

NOT A POVERTY STRICKEN ASSEMBLAGE.

It was not a poverty-stricken crowd, most of the paraders were strong and comfortably dressed. Here and there would be seen one pale and wan, but these were the exceptions.

There were three platforms for speakers in Union Square. Policemen were stationed around at three platforms to take notes of the speeches and suppress any disorder. The orators confined themselves largely to a denunciation of existing social and industrial conditions and rosy promises of the reforms that will be worked by the application of Socialist doctrine.

The principal speakers were Anita C. Black, Algonon Crassey, Abraham Cahane, the editor and publisher; Joshua Washburn and Meyer London.

SNATCHES WOMAN'S PURSE AND FLEES IN TAXICAB.

Bold Robber and Auto Escape
Through Crowded Washington
Heights Section.

Highway robbery by taxicab as a variation of the profession moved up to One Hundred and Seventy-ninth street and St. Nicholas Avenue to-day. There on a crowded street and in an obstructed view of several hundred people Mrs. Veronica Schubert of No. 514 West One Hundred and Seventy-seventh street had her handbag containing $50 wrenched from her hand by a man who jumped into a black taxi and got away before any of the surprised onlookers could interfere.

Mrs. Schubert, accompanied by her husband, Fred Schubert, and their daughter, were walking up St. Nicholas Avenue after having visited a real estate office in which Schubert has an interest. Schubert gave his wife $50 just as they were leaving the office, and she put the bills in her handbag.

The presumption is that those who planned to rob Mrs. Schubert did so at the time she was leaving the real estate office, and that they saw her with the money in her hand. The taxi shot forward at high speed and disappeared through One Hundred and Seventy-eighth street. Some boys told the police men who came upon the scene later that the number on the back of the car was "2780 N. Y."

200 GIRLS ESCAPE FIRE IN BINDERY STOREROOM.

A smoky fire in the storeroom of one of the two buildings occupied by the American Bookbinding Company at Cherry street and Rutgers slip this afternoon caused a commotion among 200 young women who were at work on the various floors. The hallways and storerooms were lighted with smoke and the employees made their escape by ascending to the fourth floor and crossing from the Rutgers slip building to the building on the Cherry street corner.

CHOKED BY 2-TON BOAT

Charles Holland of Rockaway Beach was swimming through Jamaica Bay inlet early to-day, towing a two-ton motorboat by a rope about his neck, when Harry Adams, his companion in an all-night drift about Rockaway inlet, and with him towing the boat, became helpless. The "granny knot" he had tied in the noose about his neck had slipped and Adams was both choking and drowning when Holland swam to his side.

Holland's boat, the Dackland, had broken down yesterday afternoon when they were fishing beyond Rockaway Point. About dawn the tinkering they had done to the boat caused the stuffing box to leak and the boat began to fill. Both men, knowing lines about their necks, began to swim, towing the boat.

Harry Pfeister of the Rockaway Point Life Saving Station, saw the men struggling in the water, called out the lifeboat and rescued them.

ISMAI WILL SAIL FOR HOME TO-MORROW ON THE ADRIATIC

That J. Bruce Ismay would sail to-morrow on the Adriatic was practically admitted to-day by P. A. S. Franklin, Vice-President of the International Mercantile Marine, when he returned to the White Star Line office for the first time since the Congressional investigation into the Titanic disaster was begun in Washington.

"I cannot say just where Mr. Ismay is stopping in New York to-day," Mr. Franklin said. "He is in town and will remain here until he sails. He may, and probably will, sail on the Adriatic to-morrow. There is nothing to keep him here now. The Congressional investigators are through with him and he is anxious to get home to his family and friends."

"Neither Mr. Ismay nor myself have any criticism to offer concerning the way the Congressional investigation was conducted. We considered that it was ably carried on and that it was both fair and just in its character."

Mr. Franklin was asked if Mr. Ismay had expressed any bitterness at the criticism that had been heaped upon him.

"How would anybody feel under the circumstances?" he shot back. "It is likely that any man would not resent the unfair and unjust things that were written and spoken of Mr. Ismay? Not one of the harsh things said about him were founded in fact."

Asked if he had been notified that Senator Smith would visit the White Star line offices to look at all the telegrams and messages received on the days after the sinking of the Titanic, Mr. Franklin responded:

"I have not been notified to that effect, but if Senator Smith desires any such evidence he is entirely welcome to come here and ask to see anything we have in our books or records. Concerning that alleged mysterious dispatch that was not received at our office, if the United States Government has done all in its power and cannot reach it, how can you expect the officials of this line to do so?"

The Annual May Sale of Undermuslins

offering economies of 25% to 33% on usual prices

Perhaps the most important feature of this event is the distinctiveness of the many models and designs. True, the variety and assortments are greater than in most such sales, but these things are expected in a sale of this kind. It is true, also, that prices are immensely attractive, but that is what justifies the use of the word Sale. Thus, we hold these things in common with others, even though we claim to improve upon them.

But distinctiveness is another matter. It is that something which comes from within rather than from without—from the store itself rather than from its sources of supply. We it is, for instance, who selected these beautiful undermuslins and who are mainly responsible for whatever character they may possess. Not a garment was bought in the open market, but made expressly to our specifications, according to our preconceived ideas of models, materials, trimmings and workmanship. And thus it is that this collection of under-apparel is so typical of the Saks store itself—of our consistent and successful efforts to have distinctiveness the paramount attribute of Saks merchandise.
